It is a little late but I have located some advice for our college graduates:

A year after you leave college, no one will care what your GPA was.

Once you fully understand what you want, it's not usually that difficult to get it.

At all stages of life, people will gladly offer you unsolicited lists of things you "must" do, be, or have. Most of the time you can nod your head, walk away, and ignore them.

You don't have to live your life the way other people expect you to.

Potential is good when you're 15 years old. After that, you need to start doing something.

Simplifying your life is like running – not that complicated. You don't need gadgets or monthly magazines to do either of these activities.

Before people become widely accepted as heroes, they are usually hated by large segments of the general population. See Gandhi, Jesus, Martin Luther (the original), Nelson Mandela, Winston Churchill, and many others.

Contrary to what you may have heard, it does not always "take money to make money." You can start many businesses for less than $100.

You don't need employees to have a business. In fact, it's probably easier not to.

In many organizations, it's not hard to stand out by being remarkable. Sadly, this is true in non-profit organizations just as much as in cubicle nation. It's also true in civic organizations—such as Kiwanis and Rotary.

And here is a couple located from another source: 1. Go fast in fast places and slow in slow places. 2. The best time to plant a tree is 20 years ago. The 2nd best time is now.
