Howdy friends—About 3 or 4 times a week I get emails from my friends wanting me to join them with some kind of silly rigamarole of mess like twitter, email exchange, face book, or something similar. A couple of years ago, when I was young and foolish, I actually joined up with one of the address exchanges. I was never so sick of anything in my life because I had to constantly update the software, reboot my computer to accept it and got so many Viagra emails since they (the software people sold my name to these big spammers) that I spent a lot of time just nuking spam. My next experience was with another address exchange—that's when I started getting appeals from various charities to contribute to their worthy causes. That particular one is what caused me to get another email account. My now main email account is bilroy@_____. Then my good friend Keith wanted me to join this face book scam. They sent me up to 6 emails a day till I threatened Keith's life—then they dropped down to 2 a day for a few weeks till they finally gave up. I also have an account on Yahoo that I get about 10 different Nigerian emails daily offering me millions of dollars if I'll just open my bank account to them. Since I am already independently wealthy, I don't need the money and I'm trying to divert them to President Obama for help with the deficit

Now, if any of y'all continue to keep on trying to get me involved with this kind of stuff, I will refer your email addresses to my Nigerian friends who will share their wealth with you. DO YOU UNDERSTAND? However, all other stuff is appreciated. . Brought to you by yr ob'st sv't, Bilroy X. Caruth

Editor's note: Your hardworking and humble editor sent Danny Turner a "thank you" email for the highly interesting program he put on last week. Below is his his response:

Thanks Bill, It was a great trip, We got an email from one of the missionaries this weekend. They have gone back into the village and the people were upset that we had returned to America. One of the big men in the tribe told them that if we would come back and live with them he would let us stay in his home and give us a goat each. So if things don't work out here I've always got a back up plan.

Editor's further note: In order for us as club to avoid the risk of losing Danny, I hereby propose that we begin an immediate fund raising campaign to raise money to buy Danny a goat so he will stay here. Jackie and Tina could help with keeping the goat at Danny's office during the day. Just a thought.

Got an email from our wandering flyboy concerning Taft's flight experiences:

Hello Bill, I am delighted to hear of a new high quality professional aviator in training. I really hope that Taft and I get the chance to fly together upon graduation from his flight training. I already have it planned! I think we could learn the pledge of allegiance together while still safely and proficiently operating the aircraft!! I really do not think that this will cause us to over-fly any destination airport but will make both of us better Kiwanians. I can't wait! ha ha Keep up the good work. Randy

Randy is referring to his term as president and while leading the pledge, he forgot the words. That went down in the annals of our club history along with the visit of the Ole Miss Cheerleaders and Taft pouring tea and ice in the Colonels's lap.
